Trained as a clinical neuropsychologist and CBT psychotherapist, I am an assistant professor at the University of Sussex, where I head the Reality Bending Lab. My research has three strands. Reality and its distortions: beliefs about AI-generated content, visual illusions, deception, misinformation and fake news, fiction, and altered states of consciousness. The body in cognition: how interoception, physiological states and emotion regulation shape what we take to be real. Methods: Bayesian statistics, computational models and psychophysiology, as well as the development of new software, measures and paradigms, released as open source (easystats, NeuroKit, cogmod) to support open and rigorous science.

Impact

- One of the most cited researchers in the School of Psychology, University of Sussex, and repeatedly the most cited in ResearchGate's monthly departmental figures since December 2024 (which count only staff with a ResearchGate profile).
- h-index 27, *i*10-index 38; 41 of 67 publications as first (29) or senior (12) author.
- easystats (Wikipedia) has become embedded in various textbooks and courses: Andy Field's Discovering Statistics Using R and RStudio (2nd edition, 2026) builds its R workflow on it and credits it in the acknowledgements, and Springer's Learning Analytics Methods and Tutorials (2024) teaches with it.
- Concepts and tools from my work have made their way into mainstream research: the probability of direction, an index of effect existence in Bayesian statistics (Wikipedia); NeuroKit, the most popular Python toolbox for physiological signal processing (Wikipedia); and concepts like fictional reappraisal, cited in the scientific account of the paradox of fiction (Wikipedia).
